

WHAT IF?

"WHAT IF?" questions have many possible answers because there is no one correct answer. Your answer depends on your imagination and creativity. Questions can be about anything that sparks your imagination, for example, "What if robots took over the world?", or "What if everything was shaped like a rainbow?"

CREATE a "What if?" game with 5 question cards. Write and illustrate each question on its own card

1. WHAT IF

PRESENT your game to a small group of classmates. Take turns asking and answering the questions. Take time to discuss what each person would do in the hypothetical situations. Then share one of your 'what if' questions and answers with the class.

RESPOND to the 'what if' games. Discuss how the illustrations influenced your ideas about the questions. Share your reactions to the questions and explain how your experiences and memories influenced how you thought about each answer.

CONNECT how you responded to the 'what if' questions with other times when you have been asked more straight forward questions, such as, "What time do you have to be there? How does it feel to respond to 'what if' questions? What did you learn about yourself by answering the 'what if' questions?"
